Civic Center, MOA curates changing exhibits, integrated art performances, workshops, and special events designed to highlight the dynamic development of City Center Englewood and its commitment to the arts as an indispensable part of the community.

In addition, Greenwood Village — on a high plain south of Denver and east of the Rocky Mountains — is a prime showcase for MOA’s sculpture collection. When MOA opened to the public in 1981, it displayed 19 art acquisitions. Presently our collection numbers over 150 artworks.

One of MOA’s primary outdoor exhibitions is Marjorie Park, named after MOA co-founder Marjorie Madden, on the north side of the Fiddler’s Green Amphitheatre. The park features larger-than-lifesize bronze “Alice In Wonderland” statues, and an eclectic mix of other sculptures in a broad range of mediums.

Greenwood Village has worked closely for over 35 years to do this. MOA has Museum Outdoor Arts’ mission is to make art a part of everyday life by bringing art outdoors to public spaces.

MOA also contributes to the cultural scene through its ownership of Fiddler’s Green Amphitheatre. The theatre has hosted musical events and performances by such famous artists as Bob Dylan, the Grateful Dead, and the Eagles.
